Women and sleep apnea

Did you know that approximately 15 million American women have sleep apnea?¹⁻²

Sleep apnea can affect women at any age, with or without any other contributing conditions. Sleep apnea is often associated with serious conditions such as high blood pressure, diabetes, obesity, heart failure and stroke.³ However, effective treatment can help reduce the risk of chronic diseases and other comorbidities.

- Almost 40% of newly diagnosed sleep apnea patients are women⁴
- The risk of sleep apnea in women after menopause is equal to that of men⁵
- Snoring during pregnancy may be an indication of developing sleep apnea⁶
- Insomnia and morning headaches are often the main indicators of sleep apnea in women⁷⁻⁸
- Women who snore are about twice as likely to have high blood pressure⁹
- Sleep apnea is related to a higher risk of depression and cognitive impairment or dementia in women¹⁰⁻¹¹
